Introduction

The object of this edition

The Cantigas de Santa María (CSM) is one of the major monuments of European medieval culture. It consists of a vast, carefully organized collection of devotional songs in Galician-Portuguese (419 songs), in praise of the Virgin Mary or narrating miracles attributed to her. The poetry was written and the music composed or transcribed at the royal court of Castile and León, centred in Seville, under the direction of King Alfonso X, called el Sabio (the Learned). Staves with musical notation, provided for hundreds of songs written in three books between approximately 1270 and 1285, offer an enormous amount of information on musical practice, in a well-defined spatial and temporal context.

The repertoire of the Cantigas de Santa María is impressive not only on account of the sheer number—more melodies survive for them than for all the lyrics of the southern troubadours — but also because of their variety and vitality. Musicologists, however, have paid surprisingly little attention to this repertoire (Higinio Anglés in the second quarter of the 20th century, and Gerardo Huseby and David Wulstan two generations later, were notable exceptions). Late and inadequate access to the sources, the language used, and the fact that this repertoire does not easily fit French theoretical models (the current yardstick for 13th-century music), among other reasons, caused a certain estrangement.

Higinio Anglés published the first complete musical edition in 1943, with an introduction of more than one hundred pages, followed in 1958 by two substantial commentary volumes. This was not only a formidable, but also an original and enduring musicological achievement.<sup>1</sup> The monumental presentation of the edition certainly led many to believe that most musicological issues had been satisfactorily confronted and resolved. Nowadays, however, many of these issues deserve a fresh look, amongst them being the examination and evaluation of the manuscript sources.

There are only three manuscript sources for the music. The first, kept at the Biblioteca Nacional in Madrid (MS. 10069) comes from Toledo, hence its siglum To. It includes 128 songs, and represents the first stage attained by the compilation: one hundred songs, plus prologue, epilogue and appendices. The second codex is found in the Escorial Monastery, north of Madrid (MS. T. I. 1), and, being lavishly illustrated, is generally referred to as the código rico, or through the siglum T (or E<sup>2</sup>, or e); it contains 193 songs and was meant to be the first volume of a two-volume luxury set, the second volume of which remained largely incomplete. The third codex is the so-called código de los músicos, because every tenth song is headed by an illumination representing one or more musicians. Its siglum E (or E<sup>1</sup>) mirrors the fact that it also kept in the Escorial (MS. b. I. 2). It contains 407 cantigas (apparently 416, but nine are given twice) and therefore represents the final stage of the collection.

These sources have been subject to detailed study only recently. Their nature and date have generated some controversy. This has partially to do with the fact that the Toledo codex and the Escorial codices use different notational systems. According to the traditional view (lately reinforced with good arguments by Stephen Parkinson)<sup>2</sup>, the Toledo manuscript could well be the very exemplar written before 1275 which contained the earliest collection of one hundred songs, to which appendices were immediately added; however, Higinio Anglés, led by the appearance of the notation, proposed that it was written in the early fourteenth century, and therefore preferred the Escorial codices, which were probably written (or at least initiated) towards the end of Alfonso X's reign, around 1280-1284. Of the two, Anglés chose the most complete as a basis for his edition.

A scholarly consensus has been tentatively arrived at in recent years concerning the relationship between the three codices. The earliest seems to be the Toledo codex, To; among the Escorial codices, the most authoritative, generally speaking, in both textual and musical content is the luxurious código

Reasons for this edition

Access to the contents of the sources, in its minute detail, is crucial both to improve our understanding of them, and for adequate transcription and performance. For a long time there were only two published facsimiles, that of the musical portions of the Toledo manuscript, published by Julián Ribera in 1922, and that of the códice de los músicos, published by Higinio Anglés in 1964.<sup>4</sup> Colour facsimiles of the códice rico, aimed at affluent collectors and therefore difficult to access, appeared in 1979 and in 2011;<sup>5</sup> a full colour facsimile of the Toledo MS was printed in 2003.<sup>6</sup> The older black and white reproductions were eventually made available on the Internet.<sup>7</sup> However, these early publications, having been reset or retouched by hand, hardly deserve the name of facsimiles, while the coloured ones do not always reproduce the finer notational details and other vestigial information seen in the original.

Apart from inadequate reproductions, no critical edition of the music has been published, and an apparatus recording all the variants is thus missing. Diplomatic editions are made to fill such lacunae. In the field of Romanic philology there is a long tradition of diplomatic approaches to sources of medieval Galician-Portuguese poetry, beginning in the 19th century with Ernesto Monaci (Cancioneiro da Biblioteca Vaticana), continuing throughout the 20th century (Cancioneiro da Ajuda and Cancioneiro da Biblioteca Nacional) and culminating in the recent transcription, by Martha Schaffer, of the texts in the Toledo MS of the Cantigas de Santa Maria (abbreviated here as CSM).<sup>8</sup> Whoever is interested in the music of the CSM does not have similar tools available, and ends up depending largely on the information given in Anglés's edition, thus incurring the risk of acquiring a distorted or simplified impression of the repertory.

Let us imagine that somebody wants to examine the music of cantiga 30 (or more precisely, 30 in the Escorial codices, but 40 in the Toledo manuscript): Muito valvera mais, se Deus m'ampar. Although Anglés remarks in the critical apparatus that the MSS in the Escorial present some notational differences, and although he concedes that the códice rico, T, may record here an older musical version than the códice de los músicos, E, he presents in his musical transcription the reading not of T, but that of E instead.<sup>9</sup> Above the transcription, the original notational figures are seemingly provided; the notation of the other two manuscripts is presented only sparingly, mostly when variants are involved. Anglés adds, however, a few footnotes recording variants otherwise not indicated.

The original notation of the chosen source, E, is however not accurately reproduced: there are two errors, which were afterwards transported into the facsimile plates through retouching. One of them was not taken into account in the transcription and can thus be considered a misprint; but the other, judging from the transcription, is a mistake originating with Anglés. We are led to believe that, apart from melodic transposition, the códice rico deviates from the musicians' codex, E, only twice. In fact there are two more graphic variants and two additional rhythmic variants. Furthermore, the penultimate phrase in T is not exactly the same as in the other Escorial manuscript, which has implications for the musical form.

When we turn to the Toledo MS (To), things get worse. Instead of five melodic variants and one rhythmic variant relative to the musician's codex, the only ones found or referred to in the edition, we have in fact at least nine melodic variants and nine rhythmic variants. If the second layer of the Toledo notation, that is the notes written over erasure, is taken into account, the number of rhythmic variants rises to twelve.

Clearly, to use Anglés's edition for study purposes is to stand on shaky ground. The alternatives are, however, no better. In recent years four printed musical editions (partial or complete) of Cantigas de Santa María have been published, by Martin Cunningham (2000), Roberto Pla Sales (2001), Chris Elmes (2004-2013) and Pedro López Elum (2005).<sup>10</sup> Of these four publications, the first three present the notation of codex E above or below the modern transcription proposed, as Anglés did. They follow his facsimile in introducing two or three errors: Pla and Elmes add one additional error each. Most recently, Andrew Casson provided online access to a diplomatic transcription of the musical notation in E, again according to the 1964 plates, completed by the replication, in eleven cantigas found only in To, of its notation, read in the 2003 facsimile. This work, done between September and November 2012, was complemented in 2014 by a second version in normalized notation and a third one in modern, non-rhythmic notation, with the original figures over the staff; both versions were generated from the first, and thus reproduce both its errors.<sup>11</sup> Only Pla offers a small critical apparatus for the music; Casson merely records the need for editorial intervention to compensate for an omission by the copyist. context, the need for a faithful reproduction of the original notations seems to me evident.

The aim of this edition is, therefore, to present accurately the musical notation of the medieval sources of the Cantigas de Santa María (considering the limitations of the software used), endeavouring to record, when detectable, any modification to the earliest state of the musical writing in the given source.

How this edition came about

A first attempt to access the sources was made in April 1991, when I first examined the Toledo codex in Madrid and made extensive annotations to its contents on a photocopy of Ribera's reproductions. In January 1995, I carefully revised these annotations against the original. On the same occasion, I began a detailed examination of the Escorial codices, but did not go very far, mainly because of financial constraints. For this reason I applied for funding again and again, and, having received it after a wait of almost ten years, began in October 2004 a research project which included the task: "Cultural confluences in the music of Alfonso X" (POCTI/EAT/38623/2001), which came to its end in July 2008. The team was composed only of myself and Rui Araújo as research assistant.

Between October 2005 and April 2006, I went through the Escorial codices, with frequent use of a magnifying glass, down to their last folios, while Rui Araújo looked at the Toledo manuscript to clarify some doubts. Besides an exact reproduction of the notation, some palaeographical details (erasures, modifications, additions) were also recorded. Correcting and supplementing the 1964 facsimile of E and the colour facsimiles of To and T with my annotations, the full palaeographical reading of the notation in the three codices was afterwards collated with the 1979 facsimile of T and the 2003 reproduction of To and transferred to digital support using Medieval, a plug-in for Finale made by the Klemm company. The accumulation of professional duties at my university department meant that proof-reading took much longer than expected; fortunately, at its final stage, I was able enlist the help of Ana Gaunt (née Carvalho) for MSS To and E, and later for MS T, of Mariana Ramos de Lima, who used its 2011 reproduction (PDF version) for control purposes, and helped otherwise during the final stages of the edition. With the present edition, from the winter of 2017 onwards the full results will be freely accessible on the Internet, in PDF format, through the site of the Centro de Estudos de Sociologia e Estética Musical (<<http://cesem.fcsh.unl.pt>>).

An essential tool for the technical and graphical perfecting of the work leading to this publication, the Lisbon Cantigas de Santa Maria database, must also be mentioned. It was developed at the Universidade Nova de Lisboa (CESEM/FCSH) from 2005 under the same research project referred to above, but became fully operational only in 2011, under the following project, which ran in 2010-2013: “Musical exchanges, 1100-1650: The circulation of early music in Europe and overseas in Iberian or related sources” (PTDC/EAT-MMU/105624/2008). The database, requiring FileMaker software, is meant to allow electronic searches of strings of notes, intervals and notational figures in the sources.<sup>12</sup> At the moment of writing research is done locally. In spite of attempts to secure technical updating and transfer to an online platform, the necessary funding has not so far been granted.

The Lisbon CSM database, dedicated to music, complements the text-centred Oxford Cantigas de Santa Maria database created by Stephen Parkinson (<<http://csm.mml.ox.ac.uk/>>), which was designed to give online access to a vast range of information relevant to the processes of collection, composition and compilation of the Cantigas de Santa Maria and provides the materials for a new critical edition. The index presented in this diplomatic edition of the notation is based on that of the Oxford database, thus allowing joint consultation of textual and musical materials. The notational transcriptions for individual songs will in the future also be available through the Oxford platform.

Uses of the edition

The production of a modern musical transcription—of a comparative nature, or based on a single MS; for personal use, to share with fellows or for publication—is not the only imaginable use of a diplomatic reading. Besides musicologists and their students, musicians who specialize in early repertoires will be certainly interested. They will be a minority, however: it is quite natural that when a musical source becomes available in whatever form for the purpose of performance, a performer will use it without much consideration for details of a palaeographical or editorial nature. Nonetheless, exact knowledge of the source contents provides an unmatched understanding of the scribes' attitude and of the nature of the musical gestalt they tried to capture.

In fact the scribes were not mere copyists and the CSM were not frozen objects; we can access their melodies through notations, that is, imaginative registers based on audio perception and where, through successive versions of the same composition or musical phrase, we can follow a process, often not straightforward, of appropriation and re-visitation which leaves traces in diverse variant readings. A good historical performer will have everything to gain by comparing the original notations to extract data that can be of use either to extend the basis of his or her speculative recreation, or to rethink its verisimilitude. The musical signs will have in any case to be joined to the respective texts, nowadays easily accessible. Comparison with one or another of the available musical editions will allow detection of their factual errors in the replication of the notation, and help put into context their interpretative options.

User's guide

Each one of the three digital books published as part of this edition (one per manuscript, but in either English or Portuguese versions) includes a table for common notational figures, and a separate table for those deemed rare in the MS transcribed. The distinction is made on the basis of a count of occurrences, taking into account the quantity of cantigas in which the figure is present. Since the MSS contain rather different numbers of CSM, the figures were included in the general table of To and T if the occurrences include at least three CSM. For E, which contains the largest corpus, the threshold of five CSM was adopted.

In every table the figures are presented according to the increase of the number of notes involved: one, two, three, and so on; then figures with plicas, following the same logic. Each category is headed by a separator with the respective Latin designation: NOTAE SIMPLICES; LIGATURAE BINARIAE; LIGATURAE ET CONJUNCTURAE TERNARIAE, etc. Within each category, the figures are organized according to melodic contour—descending, ascending—and from the simplest to the most complex arrangement.

The numbering of the CSM in this edition follows the original in each manuscript, except if obviously mistaken. Whenever this numbering diverges from the standard scholarly reference number, the latter is provided on the right.

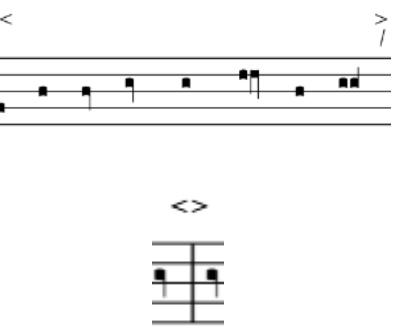

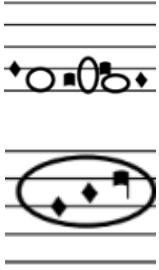

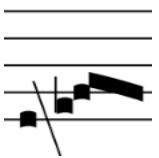

For the digital transposition of the notational signs, a compromise was necessary to allow for consistency and ease of perception. The layout in T inspired formal clarification achieved by reserving the first staff for the refrain whenever it begins the song. Standardized measures were adopted to represent vertical strokes found between figures. The following criteria were adopted: a stroke crossing the staff, and occupying between one interlinear space and three-quarters of it, is always translated as a full single-space vertical stroke. Between a quarter and three-quarters, it is made to cross half-space in the edition; for less than a quarter, it is considered unintentional and passed over in transcription. Those strokes that go beyond the staff, over it or, more frequently, below it, are reproduced only if the preceding note or notes fall on the nearest degrees (on the first/fifth line or adjacent spaces).

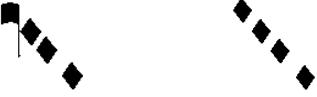

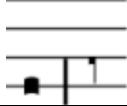

To facilitate legibility and also to respond to space constraints, it was decided that if the manuscript offers musical notation for several stanzas (which share the same music), as often happens in T, the notation is always reproduced in full for odd stanzas and refrains, while for even segments only variants relative to the preceding odd segment are recorded, appearing over its transcription. Since normally the cantiga begins with a refrain, the refrain following odd stanzas is even; this creates some discontinuity in the representation of staff changes. Exceptions to this rule are duly recorded.

Prólogo FSM (E) / 410

I FSM (E) / 411

II FSM (E) / 412

The image displays four staves of musical notation, likely for a string instrument such as a cello or bass. Each staff consists of five horizontal lines. The notation is primarily composed of square note heads, with some diamond-shaped heads appearing in the first three staves. Vertical stems extend from the note heads, and small diagonal strokes indicate direction. Measure lines divide the staves into measures, and vertical bar lines further delineate the measures. The music is divided into four systems by thick vertical bar lines. Each system begins with a clef (either C or F), a key signature, and a time signature (commonly 4/4). Measures are separated by vertical bar lines, and measure lines connect notes across these boundaries. The first three staves begin with a C-clef, while the fourth staff begins with an F-clef.

III FSM (E) / 413

IV FSM (E) / 414

V FSM (E) / 415

VI FSM (E) / 416

The image displays three staves of musical notation, likely for a wind ensemble. The notation consists of vertical stems with horizontal dashes, indicating pitch and rhythm. The first staff begins with a sharp sign, indicating E major. The second staff begins with a sharp sign. The third staff begins with a sharp sign and includes a dynamic marking 'p' (piano) at the start.

VII FSM (E) / 417

VIII FSM (E) / 418

The image shows three staves of musical notation for a string instrument, likely a violin or cello. The notation consists of vertical stems with small horizontal dashes indicating pitch and direction. The first staff begins with a double bar line and a repeat sign. The second staff begins with a single bar line and a repeat sign. The third staff begins with a single bar line and a repeat sign. There are three vertical bar lines separating the measures. The notation is primarily composed of eighth-note stems.

IX FSM (E) / 419

X FSM (E) / 420

The image displays four staves of musical notation, each consisting of five horizontal lines. The notation uses square and diamond-shaped note heads. Vertical bar lines divide the staves into measures. Above each staff, there are three vertical slashes, likely indicating a tempo or performance instruction. The first staff begins with a key signature of one sharp (F#). The second staff begins with a key signature of two sharps (G#). The third staff begins with a key signature of one sharp (F#). The fourth staff begins with a key signature of two sharps (G#). The notes in the notation are primarily eighth notes, with some sixteenth-note patterns and rests.

XI FSM (E) / 421

The image displays four staves of musical notation, likely for a string instrument such as a violin or cello. Each staff consists of five horizontal lines. The notation is composed of small black squares and diamonds, representing specific fingerings or bowing techniques. Vertical bar lines divide the staves into measures. Above each staff, there is a single vertical slash mark. The first staff begins with a key signature of one sharp (F#). The second staff begins with a key signature of one sharp (F#). The third staff begins with a key signature of one sharp (F#). The fourth staff begins with a key signature of one sharp (F#).

XII FSM (E) / 422

Prólogo (E) / 429

I (E)

The image displays three staves of musical notation, likely for a single instrument such as a guitar or banjo. The notation consists of vertical stems with horizontal dashes indicating pitch and rhythm. The first staff concludes with a circled measure. The second staff begins with a circled measure. The third staff concludes with a circled measure.

V (E)

VI (E)

VII (E)

VIII (E)

The image displays three staves of musical notation. Each staff begins with a clef (G-clef), a key signature of one sharp (F#), and a 2/4 time signature. The notation consists of eighth notes and sixteenth notes, primarily in a 16th-note pattern: (E, G, B, D) followed by a rest. This pattern repeats across all three staves. Vertical bar lines divide the measures, and vertical slashes above the staves indicate performance markings.

The musical score consists of three staves of music for a single instrument, likely a harpsichord or organ. Each staff has a key signature of one sharp (F#). The music is divided into measures by vertical bar lines. Measures 1-4 contain eighth-note patterns primarily on the C, D, and E strings. Measure 5 contains a descending eighth-note scale from G down to A. Measures 6-8 repeat the first four measures. Measures 9-10 repeat the fifth measure. Measures 11-12 repeat the ninth measure. Measures 13-14 repeat the tenth measure. Measures 15-16 repeat the eleventh measure. Measures 17-18 repeat the twelfth measure. Measures 19-20 repeat the thirteenth measure. Measures 21-22 repeat the fourteenth measure. Measures 23-24 repeat the fifteenth measure. Measures 25-26 repeat the sixteenth measure. Measures 27-28 repeat the seventeenth measure. Measures 29-30 repeat the eighteenth measure. Measures 31-32 repeat the nineteenth measure. Measures 33-34 repeat the twentieth measure. Measures 35-36 repeat the twenty-first measure. Measures 37-38 repeat the twenty-second measure. Measures 39-40 repeat the twenty-third measure. Measures 41-42 repeat the twenty-fourth measure. Measures 43-44 repeat the twenty-fifth measure. The image shows three staves of musical notation. Each staff is in common time (indicated by a 'C') and uses a treble clef. There is no key signature, but the music is in A major. The notation consists of vertical stems with small horizontal dashes at their tops to represent note heads. Measures are separated by vertical bar lines. The first staff has six measures. The second staff has four measures. The third staff has three measures. Measures 1-2 of the first staff begin with a whole note followed by a half note. Measures 3-4 of the first staff begin with a half note followed by a quarter note. Measures 5-6 of the first staff begin with a quarter note followed by an eighth note. Measures 1-2 of the second staff begin with a half note followed by a quarter note. Measures 3-4 of the second staff begin with a quarter note followed by an eighth note. Measures 1-2 of the third staff begin with a half note followed by a quarter note. Measure 3 of the third staff begins with a quarter note followed by an eighth note.

The musical score consists of four staves of music, each with a key signature of one sharp (F#) and a common time signature. The first staff begins with a bass clef and contains a measure starting with a bass note followed by a series of eighth notes. The second staff begins with a treble clef and contains a measure starting with a C note followed by a series of eighth notes. The third staff begins with a bass clef and contains a measure starting with a bass note followed by a series of eighth notes. The fourth staff begins with a treble clef and contains a measure starting with a C note followed by a series of eighth notes. Measures are separated by vertical bar lines, and each measure concludes with a vertical slash. The music is divided into measures by vertical bar lines.

The rhythm pattern is consistent across all staves.

CCLXXXI (E)

The image shows three staves of musical notation, likely for a three-part instrument such as a harpsichord or organ. Each staff consists of five horizontal lines. The top staff begins with a treble clef, the middle with an alto clef, and the bottom with a bass clef. The notation uses black dots and squares to represent different note heads, and vertical strokes indicate pitch changes. Measure lines divide the staves into measures, and a final measure line at the end of each staff indicates the end of a section. The notation is rhythmic, with various note values indicated by the placement of the dots and squares.
